BRITONS WITH BET-TALK

Mike Murphy, the coach of the Olympic team that just about swept the stadium clean at Stockholm, is noted for his repartee, and some of the Englishmen who were at Stockholm have good reason to know the sting of Mike's biting tongue. Now, good sprinters, and his one best bet Totals37 9 10 3 27 16 6 at Stockholm was Henry P. Drew, the wonderful little colored boy from Springfield, Mass., who broke down in the 100 meters. Mike thinks that Drew is one of the greatest sprinters he ever saw and he made no secret of this fact around Stockholm.

A group of Englishmen and Americans were discussing the games in general one day when the subject turned to sprinting, and the Britons quite naturally started to boost Patching, the South African, who was credited with 9 4-5 seconds in the British championships in June. The Englishmen thought that Patching was nearpassed balls, Soares, Inman; innings they were quite willing to bet that, signally defeat any man on the American team at 100 yards.
